

2022-2023 Special Circumstance – Expected Family Contribution Appeal

Who should file an appeal?

If your financial situation has changed from 2020 to 2022, you can submit this application to have your financial aid eligibility re-evaluated. Some of the most common changes in financial situations are listed on page 2. Before submitting this form, please note the following:

- You must file the Free Application for Federal Student Aid (FAFSA) for the 2022-2023 academic year.
- If your FAFSA application has been selected for verification, the verification process must be completed before review of this application will begin.
- If your Expected Family Contribution (EFC) is already zero (0), you should not submit an appeal. You are currently receiving the maximum amount of aid and we are unable to make any further adjustments. You can find your EFC through your Student Center on One.IU by clicking on “View Financial Aid,” selecting the 2023 award year, and clicking “Financial Aid Need Summary.”
- Your application should be submitted no later than 30 days before the end of the award period.
- Completing this form does not guarantee an increase in aid.
- If you have previously submitted a special circumstances application, you should not file an additional appeal based on the same reason unless instructed to do so by this office.
